FSIC American Innovation and Opportunity Fund (AIOF) congratulates graduates from its most recent Dream Creators Workforce Development cohort. The students in the AIOF program received training and incidental support prior to and throughout their attendance at Nash Community College's Underground Electrical Line Construction Academy.

AIOF received funding from the Duke Energy Foundation and is very grateful for their support of the Dream Creators Program. "Duke Energy is proud to continue our partnership and support the AIOF Dream Creators program," said Tanya Evans, Duke Energy district manager. "Our goal is to create a diverse pipeline of skilled workers who can support North Carolina's energy industry going forward, and we've seen first-hand the transformational opportunities this program provides for participants."

As with previous cohorts in the Dream Creator Program, AIOF and Nash Community College (NCC) were successful in making sure the program participants secured employment immediately after graduation. Graduates can expect to earn $50k-$100k in their first year with a good starting wage and overtime.

"As we celebrate another successful Dream Creators cohort, AIOF is excited that our partnership with Duke Energy and NCC has provided another group of young people with life-changing opportunities," said AIOF Co-founder and CEO Kevin B. Kimble, Esq.

In addition to Nash Community College and Duke Energy, AIOF would like to thank the Southern Christian Leadership Conference Roanoke Valley Chapter (SCLC-Roanoke Valley) for its continued support. "We look forward to helping more job seekers in the future through this program and will begin recruiting for the 2022 cohort in early February next year," said Mr. Kimble.
